A regular dental health check-up can actually be life-saving. Your dentist is a health care provider that is likely to detect bleeding gums that can be a sign of more than 20 conditions such as diabetes, hormonal imbalance, cancer, or vitamin deficiency, according to Chicago-area dentist Ronald Shefdor, DMD. Dentists can also prescribe home screening tests (such as those used to assess systemic inflammation) for many diseases - often at a fraction of the cost of hospital blood tests, he says. The non-profit dental clinic, located in an underground network, provides free or reduced medicaid care to or uninsured patients who walk through its doors. This is just one of many services offered by Project HOME, a Philadelphia-based organization that caters to people experiencing homelessness. There aren't many private practitioners who take Medicaid because reimbursement isn't really that high, explains Janine Musheno Burkhardt, DMD, dental director of the HOME Project and the latest Temple University 30 Under 30 laureate. Because it can be difficult for someone to find a dentist where they can actually get on treatment, they can go for years without even seeing one. Inadequate dental care affects homelessness in more ways than one. Intense toothache can push people to opioids or other substances, Dr. Burkhardt explains. Loss of teeth or decay can also affect patients' confidence, keeping them in search of work or day-to-day work. In Project HOME, no customer will be responsible for not being able to pay, no matter how much work is required. Some people may come once for an exam and only need a clean-up or one cavity filled, says Dr Burkhardt. Then there are other patients that I almost work on every tooth in my mouth. To meet the widespread demand, the program is currently operating in two Philadelphia locations and will soon include three dentists. Clinics provide a wide range of treatments such as cleaning, fillings, X-rays, extractions, crowns, bridges and root canals. Many patients come to form a close relationship with the employees of a non-profit organization. In addition to receiving medical, dental and behavioral care, customers can visit for a hot shower, warm meals or access to laundry. The HOME project, which advocates for housing, opportunities employment, health care and education, is aimed at providing comprehensive services. He launched a dental program nearly five years ago at the Stephen Klein Wellness Center in North Philly before expanding into the center of a hopeful location at a suburban station in December 2018. Dr. Burkhardt's work on the growth of the dental clinic recently earned her recognition as both Temple University's first class of 30 to 30 laureates in 2019. After a brief stint in private practice after graduating from Cornberg School of Dentistry, the graduate now found his niche helping under-51s. You kind of become their family, especially with some people who come to you quite often, she says. Or it could just be an extraordinary walk and you are able to take care of your pain... The most useful is just knowing that you have been able to help them in some way and provide some relief throughout the day. Create change in our community at Temple University, an innovative institution committed to real, positive influence in Philadelphia and beyond.
